The Water Framework Directive (WFD) establishes a legal framework to protect surface waters and groundwater across Europe. Its core environmental objectives are to prevent deterioration of aquatic ecosystems and to restore polluted surface waters and groundwater to “good status” in terms of their ecological and chemical parameters by 2015. The Environment Agency is responsible for implementing the WFD in England and Wales. This workshop provides an opportunity to hear of the Environment Agency’s work to date and plans for 2006 and beyond. It includes an update on the Ribble Pilot River Basin Project and how this has been used to test European guidance on river basin planning and public participation in the WFD; and inform the Agency’s national approach to WFD implementation.
