

Measurement and Management of Odour

6th March 2013

Talking Point Conference Centre, Scouthead, Saddleworth, Oldham, Greater Manchester OL4 4AG

Odour from waste-water treatment works is a perennial problem particularly for those sites with houses nearby. The water companies are being driven by the Ofwat service incentive mechanism to reduce adverse incoming contacts from customers, or face a reduction in their "Ofwat score". At the same time, if enough people complain to Environmental Health, they can serve a statutory nuisance abatement notice which can severely limit how a site is operated. Abatement notices are to be avoided as once served they are with the site for ever! As a consequence, this workshop on the measurement and management of odour will be of interest to decision-makers, engineers and scientists from utilities and equipment manufacturers.
